LINCOLN ECHO The greatest temperance convention ever held in the history of the nation is the record made by the Fifteenth annual convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America, held in Columbus last week. Over 3,000 delegates were present and most significant of the actions taken by this convention was the adoption of a series of resolutions which committed those present to a campaign for nationwide prohibition to be obtained through an amendment to the federal constitution.

The crowning feature of the convention was the presence of Major J. B. Merwin, of Middlefield, Conn., 85 years of age, friend and associate of Abraham Lincoln, who told how he had been present when President Lincoln in the presence of Salmon P. Chase, of Ohio, signed the internal revenue act and said as he did so that he would give his right arm if it could be avoided.

Major Merwin was the personal friend of President Lincoln and was specially commissioned by him to work in behalf of temperance among the soldiers during the Civil war. On the day of Lincoln's assassination he spoke the following words to Major Merwin: "Merwin, we have cleaned up, by the help of the people, the colossal job. Slavery is abolished. The next great question will be the overthrow of the legalized liquor traffic. And you know, Merwin, that my head and my heart, my hand and my feet, will go into that work. In 1842, less than a quarter of a century ago, I predicted that the day would come when there would be neither a slave nor a drunkard in the land. I have lived to see one prediction fulfilled. I hope to see the other realized."

Major Merwin read these words from the paper upon which he had copied them the day they were spoken.
